

STORY 4 - All that is good...

John and Marek went on a very long walk around the city. As they passed more and more buildings, John was able to get an image of what Wrocław was like and naturally - he had hundreds of questions.

- Damn, this city has something to it. Just look at those buildings! Mom says you have to be turpist to appreciate Wrocław and she may just be right.

- Turpist? - Marek raised his left eyebrow.

- You know, appreciate the ugly. You get all those beautiful, pastel-coloured old buildings, some of the modern architecture with all the shiny glass windows and then this - John pointed at the two post-communist buildings they were passing.

- Yeah, it is kind of weird. But as the time passes you really get to appreciate the history of this city, don't you?

- I heard that the Nazis demolished an entire square in the middle of the city to build an airport and only one plane took off from it!

- I think it was at Plac Grunwaldzki. The square is really huge.

- How about those dwarves though? We must have passed by at least a dozen of them!

- I honestly don't know. Mind if we look it up on the Internet?
